

Moon Wisdom Week Starting Dec 12: You Are The Author Of This Awakened World

By Andrea Maxine Frade

*As you open you feel your body ascend there is a natural light that pours through you keep this light aflame
for all may need it now to see more than ever*

There are celebrations on the way and so there should be. Take the time now in these next few weeks to connect with those you love. The dear ones that you keep close to your heart. Remember the joy and delight that rests at the core of you.

Though you feel immensely drawn to sincerely solving the world's problems through every means available to you, there is a time for that and a time for recouping your perspective.

Touch into the warm fluidity of compassion and grace, allow the lightness to flow from you. For when we are able to breathe a little deeper we console others by simply giving our presence and resolving the search for connection and forgiveness.

This is a time of reconciliation. Above all an integration of the ways in which the forces of light and dark co-mingle within you. It is a time for self-discovery and deep learning. You are laying down the stones for a new path. One by one, slowly and with patience.

There is a faint newness about you. One in which you understand and one that is true beyond what you have known. Follow the way of your heart with delicacy and precision. Allow this time of transformation to turn from within you. Anchor into the real knowing of your body with sweetness and care. Welcome with an open palm this new energy coming in.

Collectively there is a re-prioritising going on. A re-ordering of the human imagination. This is happening on both the physical level and on the level of spiritual understanding. In other words there is a longing present within the human mind. A divine discontent leading the upheaval in various states of consciousness. What is needed now is a steady, strong voice of centering and belief from within, one that embodies both logical navigation and energetic alignment.

There is no rulebook as it pertains to us in the universe, even though we hope at every turn there will be one. The universe is random – powerful – yet random. We make our choices and we do not have command over their outcome. Not everything is up to us. We don't always have the ability to determine what the ultimate value of a particular experience is, was or might be. In a very clever way life presents us with these gaps in knowing and invites us to see our separateness as the birthplace for interconnection.

It is precisely here in these spaces of (mis)understanding where creativity dwells and calls upon us. It is in this gap of knowing where the seat of the world is made.

It is here, in the silence and noise of our lives, where we recognise ourselves as the authors of this world awakened. In these delicate moments of perception we begin to see ourselves more for who we really are. In our most vulnerable moments, tender like dew turning to ice, is when creation's inception is present. There is a kind of accuracy too. The heart opens. And we willingly place ourselves upon the subtle untouched beginning.

When we clear the debris of what we think should be and move into the space of what IS we harness the power of what needs to happen. We become relevant to the flow of life that will carry us into the next stages of growth, understanding and compassion.

Calm. Steady. Clear. Intention. This is the direction you are headed.

Close your eyes. Hear the sound of your beating heart. This is how a new world begins. In the dark fluid consciousness aware of its own becoming.

One breath at a time my dear.

Honour the delicate unfolding that is You right now in this moment.
