

Solitary Witch, Brew Your Self-Love & Take Flight On Your Own

BY CRYSTAL JACKSON

I made this brew on my own
I crafted it when I was alone
It was enough, I had all I could need.
But a longing grew, became a seed

Then, I met you on a changing wind
You overflowed my cup and then
You began to think I needed you,
To mix up a strong enough love to brew.

The winds changed again, as they often will,
You started to guess how I might feel,
You began to fear that I might fall
But read the runes, what's writ on the wall.

Read the tea leaves or my hand
If you ever want to understand,
The lines in my hand will tell it true
I wanted but had no need of you.

I make this brew, I read the cards
I cast the spells, I watch the stars
I give my heart free reign to roam

Until it lands and finds a home,

But it can take flight once again
If home's a place it can't get in
And I'll be here, mixing my brew
That never had the need of you.

So, take care and count the hours
But never underestimate my power
Or assume it comes from what you bring
I never needed anything.

But wanted, yes, a hand to hold
A home with a hearth to warm the cold
A love that's stronger than the doubt
One that no darkness could drive out,

But I can take flight on my own
And brew the love I need alone.

*You said you liked the heat
And moved closer to the fire
You begged to see me lose control
In anger or desire
But how were you to know
What so few have learned
You cannot come this close
Without also getting burned.*
